Salena will discuss the fact that Illegal immigration is a top concern of the Congress, but it almost never takes action on the issue. BREAKFAST ADDRESS AND EMERGING ISSUE #1:

THE IMPENDING THREAT TO THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH:

In the US, college campuses are often the battlegrounds for debates on social issues. These battles coined new terms such as 'hate speech' and 'offensive speech', and many students and professors alike call for legislation outlawing both forms of language. Democracies in parts of Europe have already enacted legislation outlawing certain types of speech. What effect does this have on a free society? How can we best understand threats to America's most sacred principles of free speech, political liberty, and freedom of the mind?

ENERGY AND THE ENVIRONMENT

Most Americans want low cost energy, while maintaining a healthy environment. However, people take energy for granted without any appreciation for the work it takes to produce this resource. Now 'protecting' the environment has become synonymous with the 'climate change' debate, ignoring how these two facets interact with market forces.

CONGRESS SHALL HAVE THE POWER: LAWMAKERS AND THE CONSTITUTION

The Constitution recently turned 231 years old. Upon reading it, Thomas Jefferson called it "unquestionably the wisest Constitution ever yet presented to men." It remains, to this day, the oldest written national constitution in continuous use in the world. But, can it still be said to be the wisest of all constitutions? And can its wisdom only be gleaned by judges and legal experts, rather than Members of Congress? David Azerrad will discuss how lawmakers should understand their constitutional role in a federated republic, and what their oath to uphold the Constitution mean.

In the current global geopolitical landscape, many nations or entities threaten the safety of American citizens and US's interests in multifarious ways. Some of the United States' greatest threats have changed or dissolved within the past two years, while others have remained consistent or even intensified. Old rivals and potential peer competitors make national security an ever more complex but necessary concern.
